The Alaska Department of Fish and Game (ADFG), Division of Wildlife Conservation is recruiting for a Wildlife Biologist I to assist the predator-prey research program in Southeast Alaska. The position will provide technical support to implement research projects and will have opportunities to contribute to all aspects of this dynamic and multifaceted program. The successful candidate will be self-motivated, professional, possess the ability to critically evaluate scientific information, creatively solve problems, and effectively communicate and coordinate with other wildlife professionals.

This position will lead field work activities and provide technical support for predator-prey research in southeast Alaska under the general guidance of a Wildlife Biologist III. The main duties of the position are divided into field work, lab work, and data management/analysis, synthesis, and communication.
