Position Summary

We are seeking a post-MS researcher who will lead field operations on a collaborative research effort among WICFRU, the Center for Limnology (CFL) at UW-Madison, and the Wisconsin DNR. The primary objective of the project is to determine if large-scale removals of centrarchids result in improved walleye recruitment in a northern Wisconsin lake. The research associate will lead fyke net and electrofishing surveys, supervise student employees, coordinate sampling with CFL and DNR staff, maintain boats, motors, and other field equipment, process otoliths and diet samples, manage and analyze data, present results at scientific meetings, and lead and contribute to the preparation of manuscripts submitted for journal publication. Duties will require extensive field work that will require working in poor weather conditions (cold and wet). Duties will also require extended travel and overnight stays. The research associate will contribute to many additional research projects focused on walleyes, muskellunge, lake sturgeon, and lake whitefish and they will have the opportunity to develop their own research related to the primary project.
Required Qualifications

- MS in Fisheries or closely related field
- Extensive experience operating boats and conducting fisheries sampling using a variety of gears.
- Demonstrated ability to present scientific information in both oral and written formats.
- Familiarity with R or SAS programming languages.

Preferred Qualifications

- PhD in Fisheries or closely-related field.
- Previous experience operating an electrofishing boat
- Demonstrated ability to publish in peer-reviewed literature.
